

SAGE Documents: UK Govt Spun COVID To Scare Brits To Stay Home

Once again, the UK government has been shown to have used 'covert tactics' in order to scare UK residents into staying at home for lockdown by increasing the 'perceived threat' of COVID' rather than genuine science-backed risk assessment data, and also used 'hard-hitting emotional messages' designed to cover the public into complying with the government's arbitrary diktats.

Due to the heightened level of public outrage, mainstream media outlets are finally being forced to admit what they have been systematically covering-up now for 12 months – that Government have been involved in active psychological and information warfare measures against their own population.

In a document presented to the UK government's 'SAGE' confab, a scientific group meant to advise government on pandemic policies, it was revealed how technocrats sought to increase the 'perceived threat' of COVID-19 using aggressive psychological 'hard-hitting emotional messages' in order to brainwash the public into compliance.

Upon hearing the official admission, some psychology professions have turned their sights on Downing Street, accusing bureaucrats of using “covert psychological strategies” in order to hype-up the threat of the virus, and offering no context as to the actual risk posed to the general public.

Government officials are accused of creating 'a state of heightened anxiety' which led to many people becoming 'too frightened to attend hospital'.

This rebuke of the government's active measures is given further credence by the fact that the majority of hospital beds in the UK remained largely empty in 2020, especially during the first few months of the 'pandemic.' This is especially relevant because it was at this same time when the government and mainstream media were relentlessly pushing out the idea that health services were 'under threat' of being overrun by Covid, only it never happened.

As a result of the government's fear campaign, along with the overall throttling of the NHS, has been an estimated 4.66 million people left waiting many months to begin even routine treatment, as well as thousands of pre-cancer screening appointments abandoned or pushed back – all because of the constant ramping-up of the fear of Covid.

The question still remains: will cabinet ministers be held to account for this unprecedented over-reach of state power?

Experts fear Britons have been the subject of an experiment in the use of tactics which operate 'below their level of awareness,' it was said.

They have now made a formal complaint to an organisation which will rule on whether Government advisers are guilty of a breach of ethics.

Downing street denies this, claiming it simply presented the facts.

Complainants point to a document handed to the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies last March, when the pandemic began to rapidly grow in Britain.

The paper, written by Scientific Pandemic Influenza Group on Behaviours, said:

'A substantial number of people still do not feel sufficiently personally threatened; it could be that they are reassured by the low death rate in their demographic group, although levels of concern may be rising.'

'The perceived level of personal threat needs to be increased among those who are complacent, using hard-hitting emotional messaging. To be effective this must also empower people by making clear the actions they can take to reduce the threat.'

The document, seen by the Telegraph, allegedly then gave 14 options for improving compliance including 'use media to increase sense of personal threat', which they said would be highly effective but runs the risk of 'negative' side effects.

SAGE members have since claimed the British public have been 'subjected to an unevaluated psychological experiment without being told that is what's happening.'

They added that SPI-B reports are often not 'challenged' by SAGE because many of those involved are 'not very well equipped to evaluate it.'

'When someone from SPI-B is saying we need to ramp up the fear and keep it ramped up – there wasn't much questioning of that at the beginning and most of the questioning came from external sources, not from within.'

SPI-B is described as providing behavioural science advice aimed at anticipating and helping people adhere to interventions that are recommended by medical or epidemiological experts.

(...) Last November, Sir Patrick Vallance admitted he had 'regrets' over frightening people with a doomsday dossier that forecasted as many as 4,000 Covid-19 deaths a day over winter and was used to justify a second national lockdown.

Number 10's top scientific adviser made the comments alongside Professor Chris Whitty, England's chief medical officer, after the pair were hauled before MPs to defend SAGE's modelling that also predicted hospitals would be overrun with virus patients by the end of this month.

During the grilling by members of the House of Commons Science and Technology Committee, Labour MP Graham Stringer asked Sir Patrick if he believed he had frightened people with the bleak deaths data presented during Saturday night's press briefing.

The Chief Scientific Adviser said: 'I hope not and that's certainly not the aim... I think I positioned that as a scenario from a couple of weeks ago, based on an assumption to try and get a new reasonable worst-case scenario. And if that didn't come across then I regret that.'

HL Mencken said "The whole aim of practical politics is to keep the populace alarmed, and hence clamorous to be led to safety, be menacing it with an endless series of hobgoblins, all of them imaginary."

Government and the mainstream media particularly the BBC have demonstrated incompetence to an extreme level as the abuse of power has ramped up in concert with the sage advice.

Authority appears to believe it has a place in a world that requires morality to function according to principles of natural law.

They should all have been on Trial long ago, but they'll still be enjoying their luxurious lifestyles when most of us are pushing up daisies or rotting away in Re-Education / Death Camps, at this rate?

How about getting it Legally recorded that this mRNA technology is NOT a "Vaccine"? It would at least remove their Self-proclaimed Legal indemnity from prosecution, I'd have thought? We Seriously need a Mass Minion Mutiny over here, asap.

Great article, thank you.
